The power of eminent domain is being reshaped across the nation by court rulings and legislation.

While recent court activity and legislation has involved the controversial use of eminent domain to take property for economic development by private parties, municipalities are threatening to use eminent domain to take “underwater” mortgages, and budgetary constraints are imposing pressures on condemning authorities. How will this shake out? How can the eminent domain and land use practitioner stay abreast of all of the changes?

This popular and long-running advanced course kicks off with a comprehensive update on eminent domain case law and legislation. On Thursday and Friday afternoons, dual tracks address important substantive and practice topics in a series of breakout sessions, taught by nationally recognized and experienced professionals. Registrants can learn about the key issues in substantive takings law or choose from another array of sessions chock full of practice pointers.

Learn what you need to know to stay current in your practice. Here are just some of this year’s topics for discussion:

- key practice issues, including: assessing relocation costs, Keystone Pipeline developments, using the iPad at trial, protecting the record for appeal, redeveloping shopping malls through urban renewal, how to work with a jury consultant, and addressing title issues and project plans at trial
- updates on eminent domain case law, regulatory law, and just compensation
- more than 20 sessions on hot topics, such as: design build projects, legal protection for appraisal methodologies, and appraising utility corridors
- substantive law concerns, including: apportionment of damages between landlords and tenants, use of FOIA in eminent domain proceedings, use of first and second generation rents, billboard valuation, condemnation issues in the aftermath of a natural disaster, and legal issues when federal funds are involved in a project
- ethical issues for eminent domain and land use attorneys

Networking opportunities are scheduled throughout the program during breakfasts, networking breaks, a Thursday afternoon reception, and evening social activities arranged by a special hospitality committee. Come and meet with colleagues from around the nation, exchange ideas, and enjoy the fellowship.
